Thought for the week: Part Three Series on Baptism Justin Martyr

In part three of our series on Baptism, we encounter Justin Martyr, a Christian philosopher and teacher, born into a Pagan family around AD 100 in Flavia Neapolis, now Nablus in the West Bank. Justin became a Christian around AD 130.

Around AD 155, during the reign of Emperor Antoninus Pius, Christians living in Rome were facing arrest and possible execution for publicly professing their faith. From the Roman perspective, Christians refusing to worship the traditional gods was seen as an act of open defiance, as such worship expressed loyalty to Rome.

In response to this persecution and Roman accusations of atheism—the refusal to worship Rome's gods—Justin wrote his "First Apology" ¹ in Greek, addressing the emperor, the Senate and the Roman people. In chapter 61, we find Justin's thoughts on Baptism.

The Baptismal journey begins with listening and believing in the teaching of Christ, finally choosing to live in Christ, turning away from sin. The preparation for Baptism begins with the community and candidate praying and fasting for the forgiveness of sin. The candidate is then brought to water and washed in the name of the "Holy Trinity". Justin calls this washing "Illumination", as those accepting the Christian teaching are "illuminated in their understandings".

"To be Baptised is to begin a new life, living in the light of Christ".

Justin was martyred by beheading in Rome around AD 165 for refusing to worship the pagan gods. The Church of England commemorates him on 1 June. Next week, in part four, we will encounter "John the Baptist". Denise Mordell.
